
✦ Slide 16 – Title Slide (Process Analysis Essays)

"Myself Faisal Imtiaz (24-SE-55). Now I will be presenting the next type of expository essay — Process Analysis Essays."

(pause for 2 seconds, then say:)

"switch the slide, please"

Slide 17 – What is a Process Analysis Essay?

"A Process Analysis Essay is a type of expository essay that explains how to do something, or how something works. Think of it like a recipe or a user manual — it gives the reader clear, step-by-step instructions or explanations.

There are a few key things that make this type of essay unique. First, it breaks a complex task into simple, manageable parts. Second, all the steps must follow the correct time order — meaning you go from the beginning to the end, without jumping around. And third, the goal is simple: by the time the reader finishes reading, they should fully understand the process from start to finish.

(pause, then say:)

"Please go to the next slide."

Slide 18 – Two Types of Process Essays

"Now, there are actually two types of Process Analysis Essays:

The first type is called a Directive Essay — also known as a 'How-To' essay. This one talks directly to the reader and tells them exactly what to do. It usually lists the materials or tools needed before starting, and it often uses the word 'you' to address the reader directly. A simple example of this would be an essay titled: 'How to bake a chocolate cake.'

The second type is called an Informative Essay — or a 'How It Works' essay. This one does not ask the reader to perform any action. Instead, it simply explains how a process happens, usually in nature or in the world around us. A good example of this would be an essay explaining 'How a volcano erupts.'

So to summarize — if the essay is teaching you to do something, it's directive. If it's just explaining how something happens, it's informative."

(pause, then say:)

"Please go to the next slide."

Slide 19 – The Logical Sequence

"Now let's talk about structure:

Every process essay follows a logical sequence of four stages.

You begin with Step 1: Preparation — where you gather all the tools and materials you are going to need.

Then comes Step 2: The Start — where you clearly explain the very first action the reader needs to take.

After that is Step 3: The Middle — this is where you walk through the remaining steps, one by one, in the exact correct order.

And finally, Step 4: The Finish — where you describe the final result, so the reader knows what a successful outcome looks like.

This four-step framework keeps your essay clean, easy to follow, and logical."

(pause, then say:)

"Please go to the next slide."

Slide 20 – Tips for Writing Process Essays

"Before I wrap up my part, let me share four important tips for writing a strong process essay.

First — Be clear and simple. Always use easy, straightforward language. Remember, the reader is following along with you, so if your words are too complicated, they will get confused and lose track.

Second — Use transition words. Words like 'First,' 'Next,' 'Then,' and 'Finally' are very powerful in a process essay. They guide the reader smoothly from one step to the next.

Third — Keep the correct order. This might sound obvious, but it is one of the most common mistakes. Your steps must always follow a logical, time-based sequence. Never mix them up or go backwards.

And fourth — Do not skip steps. Even the smallest detail matters in a process essay. If you leave out a step, the reader may not be able to complete the process correctly, and the whole essay loses its purpose.

These four tips, if followed, will help you write a process essay that is clear, professional, and truly useful to the reader."

(pause, then say:)

"This concludes my part on Process Analysis Essays. I'll now hand it over to Hasnain..."

THANK YOU
